Environment Canada and Climate Change has issued a winter storm warning for Erin and the surrounding area.

Snow is forecast to begin late this afternoon starting around 3 p.m. and will become very heavy at times, before changing to periods of rain tonight as temperatures rise above freezing.

Strong southeasterly winds gusting up to 70 km/h will combine with heavy snow to cause significantly reduced visibility at times.

After the system moves on, much colder Arctic air will settle across the region.

The County EM team will continue to monitor alerts and forecasts as the event draws near, and will send out more information as necessary.
